GOSPEL CONNECTON: Third Sunday of Easter

The road back from infidelity

Marriages fall apart for many different reasons, but one of the most common and challenging to overcome is the discovery that one partner has cheated on the other.

It can be a fatal blow to most marriages — but not always. Marriage counselors and therapists are finding that more and more couples are choosing to remain together, that couples who choose to work through issues of trust often end up with a stronger, more loving and mutually understanding relationship than they had previously.

Many spouses care deeply for the well-being of their partners even while lying to them, and just as many of those betrayed continue to love the ones who lied to them. They find a way to stay together. Betrayal cuts to the bone, but the wound can be healed.

Writing in The New York Times [January 23, 2018], health columnist Jane E. Brody recounts the experience of a friend who found herself in that position when she discovered her husband’s affair.

“At first I wanted to kick him out, but I realized that I didn’t want to get divorced. My mother did that and she ended up raising three children alone. I didn’t want a repeat of my childhood. I wanted my son, who was then two years old, to have a father in his life. But I also knew that if we were going to stay together, we had to go to couples counseling.”

About a dozen sessions later, the woman came away from the experience with life-changing insights:

“I know I’m not perfect. I was very focused on taking care of my son, and my husband wasn’t getting from me whatever he needed. Everybody should be allowed to make mistakes and learn from them. We learned how to talk to each other and really listen. I love him and respect him, I’m so happy we didn’t split apart. He’s a wonderful father, a stimulating partner, and while our marriage isn’t perfect — whose is? — we are supportive and nurturing of each other. Working through the affair made us stronger.”

It’s hard work: to forgive and to seek forgiveness, to restore trust and rebuild a shattered relationship, to recognize the brokenness that led to estrangement and to commit together to mending the cracks. But Jesus gives us a model of such reconciliation in today’s Easter Gospel. Jesus’ lifting up of Peter’s love and commitment transforms Peter’s utter failure into understanding and wisdom that enables Peter to take on his role in the post-Resurrection story. It is the same movement from brokenness to healing, from betrayal to trust that couples in crisis undertake to stay together. The Easter Christ calls Peter and his brothers and now all of us to take on his work of reconciliation: to possess — despite our doubts and disappointments — the heart of the Risen Jesus to forgive and seek forgiveness, to be the means of enabling God’s mercy to be realized in our own families, neighborhoods and communities.
